Bartelt Aviation Press Release

Bartelt Aviation is featured in Flying Magazine.

Sturgis, Michigan, December 20, 2006 – Flying Magazine interviews John Bartelt, President of Bartelt Aviation. The article written by Tom Benenson reviews the current used aircraft market place and the importance of seeking professional assistance when purchasing a used aircraft. See the January 2007 issue, page 68.

"It was an honor to be interviewed by such a prestigious aviation magazine that is considered to be the Worlds most widely read aviation magazine. I believe it is important that aircraft buyers receive accurate professional advice to ensure they have a positive aviation experience. It is critical that people new and experienced to aviation don't become discourage with our industry. Our future depends on it.

Evaluating an aircraft's value is based on current market conditions, proper log book research, and a thorough mechanical evaluation. Proper evaluation of these hot points will ultimately determine the aircraft's value regardless what an aviation value guide suggests. Professional representation should be considered in order to make in informed purchase decision.

Advice focusing on integrity is of utmost importance to sustain long-term repeat business. Seeking professional consulting ensures a positive experience for aircraft buyers. Our firm has the expertise and experience to accomplish an aircraft purchase properly. " States John Bartelt, President of Bartelt Aviation.
